

Biography for Dr. David J. Cleary

Dr. David Cleary currently leads Aramco's Detroit Research Center located in Novi, MI. Aramco is the U.S. subsidiary of Saudi Aramco, the world's largest fully integrated energy enterprise.

Dr. Cleary has over 25 years of experience focused in the areas of transportation energy, powertrain and fuel technologies. He began his career with General Motors in 1994 as a senior research engineer within the R&D organization, where he was responsible for contributing toward the innovation, exploration and development of advanced engine technologies. In 2008, Dr. Cleary became a group manager responsible for establishing the General Motors China Science Lab's Engine and Transmission Systems research group located in Shanghai China. Dr. Cleary joined Aramco in 2013 to lead the transportation energy, powertrain, and fuels research activities. He received his Ph.D. in Mechanical Engineering in 1994 at the University of Wisconsin – Madison.